Books

Faith, Will, and Revolutionary Change: Modernity, Salvation, and Liberation in East and West.
 (New Tentative Title) Under contract for publication by Princeton University Press.

The book offers a comparative analysis of the theme of spiritual regeneration in the thought of revolutionary Marxist thinkers in Asia, Africa, and Latin America. Making systematic comparisons among thinkers who stressed the need for revolution in the cultural and spiritual realm in these diverse settings, the book draws on the perspectives offered by liberation theology in Latin America and Black theology in South Africa to examine the marriage between Marxian analyses of socioeconomic crisis and the new importance of the transcendent. The responses of these thinkers to the modernist view that mistrusts the non-rational as the motive force behind social injustice and extremist violence are considered so that the potential contribution of these non-Western perspectives to Marxism and to the broader Western discourse on modernity as a whole can be assessed.

Competing Modernities in Twentieth-Century Japan, three-volume conference volume under contract with the University of Hawaii Press. As Series Co-Chair, major contributor to conceptualization, planning, and execution of Volume I: Taisho Demokurashii, based on conference held at Westin Maui, November 1-5, 1995. In progress. Editor of Volumes 2 and 3.

The State, Identity, and the National Question in China and Japan. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1994.

A systematic, comparative approach to both Chinese and Japanese political thought and practice to study a hitherto neglected aspect of the adaptation of Western political philosophy and radical thought to a non-European context. Focusing on the nature and role of the nation-state, the study explores the ways in which Chinese and Japanese radical political theorists attempted to reconcile their relatively new appreciation for the nation-state (and its historical value for China and Japan) with their allegiance to Marxism and its vision for a modernizing, internationalist, socialist revolution. These interpretations are analyzed systematically with reference to Western political thought, as well as to the domestic and international contexts of the 1920s and 1930s, when these issues were most clearly delineated and debated in both China and Japan.

Marxism and the Crisis of Development in Prewar Japan. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1986.

A comprehensive analysis of the Marxist debate on Japanese capitalism (Nihon shihon-shugi ronsō). This study focuses on the prewar controversy between the Rōnō-ha and Kōza-ha on the nature of Japanese capitalism and its implications for the possibility of socialist revolution in Japan.

DISSERTATION

"State and Revolution in China and Japan: Marxist Perspectives on the Nation-State and Social Revolution in Asia." Dissertation Committee: Professors Benjamin I. Schwartz and John D. Montgomery

The dissertation employed a comparative approach to both China and Japan to study a hitherto neglected aspect of the adaptation of Marxism-Leninism to a non-European context. Focussing on the issue of the nature and role of the nation-state before, during, and after the revolution, the study explores the ways in which Chinese and Japanese theorists attempted to reconcile their relatively new appreciation for the nation-state and its historical value for China and Japan with their allegiance to Marx's ideal of socialist revolution. These interpretations are analyzed systematically with reference to the
